Mulholland Drive 's ending with the woman at Club Silencio whispering is an example of Lynch's aural deception and surreality, according to Ruth Perlmutter, who writes, "The acting, the dreams, the search for identity, the fears and terrors of the undefined self are over when the film is over, and therefore, there is only silence and enigma." Soundtrack. The album progresses much like a ...

The one part of Mulholland Drive that really gives credence to this theory is the famous theatre scene. Betty and Rita go the theatre, where a make-up streaked, exhausted woman sings an acapella Spanish version of Roy Orbison's Crying. She then collapses, and the emcee announces that there 'is no band'.
